

"Sight Unseen" for the visually impaired.

Sarah Heinrich, a certified vision rehabilitation therapist at Metrolina Association for the Blind reads some of the descriptive braille that introduce the art sculptures. Members of Metrolina Association for the Blind will be the first group to experience the artwork on Friday, April 20, 2012 at 10:45am. The public art department is working with other visually-impaired groups to come out and experience the artwork. OSight Unseen is a new public artwork installed along Little Sugar Creek Greenway that is specifically geared toward the visually impaired. The art is located in Midtown Park, S. Kings Dr. and Baxter St. and created by Po Shu Wang and Louise Bertelsen of Living Lenses based in Berkley, California
 OT.Ortega Gaines - ogaines@charlotteobserver.com

Sarah Heinrich, a certified vision rehabilitation therapist at Metrolina Association for the Blind interacts with one of the four small music box spheres on rails throughout the art garden area. Members of Metrolina Association for the Blind will be the first group to experience the artwork on Friday, April 20, 2012 at 10:45am. The public art department is working with other visually-impaired groups to come out and experience the artwork. OSight Unseen is a new public artwork installed along Little Sugar Creek Greenway that is specifically geared toward the visually impaired. The art is located in Midtown Park, S. Kings Dr. and Baxter St. and created by Po Shu Wang and Louise Bertelsen of Living Lenses based in Berkley, California
 OT.Ortega Gaines - ogaines@charlotteobserver.com

Mary Le O'Daniel(CQ) , reads the braille on one the plaques that helps the visually impaired understand what the artwork is about. OT.Ortega Gaines - ogaines@charlotteobserver.com